JOBS IN ITALY FOR ENGLISH SPEAKERS

Looking for a job in a foreign country is always a bit of a hassle, firstly language is a bit of a problem, and plus sometimes the economic situation can already be dire for the country you're in. But fear not, cause you'll find a way to use that English to your advantage, I mean come on how hard can it be to find jobs in Italy for english speakers. Let's look at a few options that can help you find work opportunities in Italy and also how to get a job in Italy.

Keep in mind that to work in Italy you do need to go through some legal work that you can find on our main website.

FREELANCE

Freelancing is on the rise everywhere, it's no doubt the same back home, so if you're in a new country why not go on a little job hunt on the various Freelance Job offering sites you can find online? like Upwork or Fiverr. The competition is fierce, cause everyone wants to work from home, so polish that CV and spam all the offerings you can. Don't get yourself down if you can't find anything that's up your alley on the first try, but you'll find out that sooner or later you'll find the perfect match for you. Plus if it's your first time on a Freelance hunt, my personal advice is to take whatever job to start. I mean it's part of living that Freelancer life.

STARTUPS

Startups are a huge reality in Italy, cause it's really the only way young people can get some tax concessions in the crushing tax hell that's Italy. Plus, everyone that has a start-up wants English speakers, cause their target markets usually have English speakers as main consumers, plus I mean the Internet is all about English. Now, where can you find all these startups? a good way to start is on LinkedIn, I know it's a pretty obvious answer, but really that's where you'll find the most professional startups to work with. Yep, there's a great selection of jobs in Italy for English speakers.

TEACH. TEACH. TEACH!

I know. I knooooooow. Teaching is the classic job that everyone can get when they come into the country, I mean it's the easiest way to get cash during the year really. I mean you do need to have the patience, but you'll know it's a steady job that helps you not only fill up your CV but also gets you learning Italian quicker, you'll be surrounded by Italian kids and teachers that can help you with your misunderstandings. Plus, if you don't want to be in a school environment you can always be an English tutor. So the easiest way to working in Italy as an American is teaching.

INTERNATIONAL COMPANIES

Last, but not least look for listings at American companies in Italy cause you never know you might as well find your dream job in the country you love the most! It's full of international brands in that have HQs in the country, so if you look hard enough you might find that opening you need. Maybe this last one is more for who is wondering how to move to Italy and get a job, but hey maybe your studying here and you'll find the job you studied for as well.
